Korn

...dredging up approximately 385 tons of lunar dust...
In addition to recording the collision,
The Shepherding Spacecraft will fly through The regolith plume thrown up by the collision.....Shepherding Spacecraft will utilize its specialized sensors
And will look for water's telltale chemical signature
Within the larger debris plume created by the Centaur, Possibly in the form of ice, hydrocarbons or hydrated materials...Those who live to the west...
Will have the best opportunity because the sky will still be dark.
Those living east of the Mississippi will still have the moon in the sky,
But either dawn twilight...
